Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace continued to make good progress yesterday following Sunday's surgery for the removal of the bullet lodged in his spinal canal.

He resumed physical therapy exercises and was able to sit up in bed for the first time.

Wallace was shot by a would-be assassin on May 15 after making a speech at a Laurel shopping center in behalf of his candidacy for the Democratic nomination as president.

In a medical bulletin issued from Holy Cross Hospital shortly before noon, the governor's doctors said:

"Gov. Wallace's condition is good on this second post-operative day.

"He is taking solid foods by mouth and is handling them well.

"All of his physical signs are good, including blood pressure, pulse and temperature. He is permitted to sit up now and his pain from the recent operation is diminishing.

"Physical therapy has been resumed in his room. There is essentially no change in his neurological paralytic status."
